Tyler Technologies Signs Multi-Solution Contract with the City of Madison, Wisconsin

DALLAS -- July 1, 2010 – Tyler Technologies, Inc. (NYSE: TYL) announced today that the City of Madison, Wisconsin, with a population of approximately 230,000, has signed a multi-solution agreement with Tyler for its Incode municipal court and Munis® enterprise resource planning (ERP) solutions. The agreement is valued at approximately $5.5 million.

"The City of Madison chose Tyler's integrated solutions because they proactively position the city for the future," said Accounting Services Manager Patricia A. McDermott, CPA. "By implementing Tyler, the city will be able to offer Web-based services for citizens, vendors and our employees. Incode and Munis will allow the city to incorporate leading business practices across departments, eliminating manual processing and making better use of employees' time, all while providing a high return on investment."

Madison has invested in a broad range of Incode municipal court and Munis financial, human capital management, content management, and citizen services applications. In addition to software licenses, the agreement includes maintenance, support and related professional services, including dedicated on-site implementation services.

"Tyler has multiple product lines that represent a minimal risk investment for large implementations due to Tyler's extensive local government expertise," said John S. Marr Jr., president and CEO of Tyler Technologies. "Tyler's Incode and Munis solutions provide the efficiencies Madison requires as well as position the city for future growth. The fact that Tyler meets the city's requirements as a single-source provider, from implementation through maintenance, is further evidence of our reputation for providing the systems that local government entities need to better serve the public."
