Taser International Inc. Receives Working Capital Line of Credit from Silicon Valley Bank

Phoenix, AZ -- June 13, 2001 -- Silicon Valley Bank (the "Bank"), a wholly owned subsidiary of Silicon Valley Bancshares, announced it provided TASER International Inc. with a $1.5 million line of credit.

TASER International, the leading company in the development, manufacturing, and sales of non-lethal stun devices, will use the financing for working capital purposes.

"TASER International Inc. has found Silicon Valley Bank to be unique in working with young high-growth technology companies and their financing needs," said Phillips W. Smith, chairman of TASER International Inc.

Through its advanced non-lethal protection systems, TASER offers a safe, highly effective means of self-defense. The Company also has developed and implemented an innovative weapons tracking program called AFID (Anti-felon Identification). AFID is the first fully functional weapon tracking system that can trace back to a registered user from evidence left at a crime scene. This system has been highly effective not only in deterring criminal behavior, but also in securing legality for the Company's products in over 60 countries.

"Watching the evolution of TASER International from its emergent stage to its recent IPO has been exciting," said Amy Lou Blunt, relationship manager in the Bank's Phoenix office. "The dedication and support of the founding investors has played a significant role in guiding the company to where it is today, as well as fostering our banking relationship. We are pleased to continue our association with TASER, and look forward to their continuing success."
