SCI Technology, Inc. Announces Start Of Production For Raytheon Missile Systems Electronic Assemblies

10/28/2014

HUNTSVILLE, Ala., Oct. 28, 2014 /PRNewswire/ -- SCI Technology, Inc. ("SCI"), a division of Sanmina Corporation (NASDAQ: SANM), located in Huntsville, Alabama, today announced that it has begun production of complex electronic assemblies for the Miniature Air Launched Decoy (MALD®) and the GBU-53/B (SDB II) for Raytheon Missile Systems. A ceremony to recognize the start of production will take place October 29, 2014, at the SCI facility in Huntsville for local dignitaries, members of the congressional delegation, other guests, Raytheon Missile Systems Executives and SCI employees. This event will be co-hosted by SCI and Raytheon.

"SCI is very proud to launch production of these critical programs for Raytheon Missile Systems," said Mike Underwood, President of SCI Technology, Inc. "Beginning production brings together SCI's complete solution for Raytheon, including our end-to-end capabilities, customer support, exceptional quality and delivery performance. In support of these and other Raytheon programs, we have dedicated manufacturing resources and personnel to ensure success."
