California Micro Devices Renews $15 Million Revolving Credit Facility With Silicon Valley Bank

MILPITAS, Calif., October 25, 2005 — California Micro Devices (Nasdaq: CAMD) today renewed its $15 million revolving credit facility with Silicon Valley Bank, the primary, subsidiary of SVB Financial Group (Nasdaq: SIVBE), for another year.

"As California Micro Devices' primary financial services partner since 2002, Silicon Valley Bank has had the opportunity to see CMD grow and accomplish its goals from the front lines," said Tom Smith, senior vice president, Silicon Valley Bank. "We're pleased to once again support CMD and we take pride in providing the company, and other leading technology and life science companies in Northern California and across the country, with the financial services they require."

According to Greg Miller, CMD chief financial officer, "Silicon Valley Bank is a true business partner that understands our needs. Since we began our relationship three years ago, we have received timely financial support that has encompassed equipment financing, revolving credit facilities and the refinancing of an industrial revenue bond as well as the opportunity to participate in the annual SVB Tech Investors Forum."
