DefenseWeb Technologies Selects Silicon Valley Bank: Secures New Line of Credit

SAN DIEGO, July 20, 2004 - DefenseWeb® Technologies, an emerging custom software developer and systems integrator serving Department of Defense (DoD) organizations, today announced that it selected Silicon Valley Bank, the primary banking subsidiary of Silicon Valley Bancshares (Nasdaq: SIVB), as its principal banker. The arrangement includes the establishment of a line of credit for working capital purposes.

“We take pride in our continued relationships with leading technology companies, in San Diego and around the country, like DefenseWeb,” said Tim Bubnack, managing director, Silicon Valley Bank. “Silicon Valley Bank strives to provide DefenseWeb, and other emerging and established technology and life science companies, with creative solutions and diversified financial services that will help them successfully execute their business objectives.”

The arrangement with Silicon Valley Bank is a strategic step for DefenseWeb following its new partnership with SAIC and contract announcements to deploy customized enterprise tracking software programs for the U.S. Army and U. S. Air Force’s family service support divisions.

“We look forward to working with Silicon Valley Bank as a trusted advisor and financial partner," said Douglas Burke, CEO of DefenseWeb. “Our expertise in developing custom software and clinical information systems for DoD agencies has resulted in consistent revenue and profit growth. As we continue to expand our business, the partnerships we forge will play an integral role in our ability to deliver solutions on time, within budget and beyond our customer’s expectations.”
