Teravicta Technologies Secures Equipment Debt Facility from Silicon Valley Bank

Austin, TX -- August 8, 2001 -- Teravicta Technologies, Inc., a provider of next-generation radio frequency (RF) solutions for wireless devices, announced that it has recently secured a debt facility with Silicon Valley Bank. Proceeds from this facility will be used for capital equipment purchases to support advanced test and production needs across Teravicta's product lines.

"Our focus is to solve key problems inherent to most wireless voice and data applications, such as the need for improved quality, greater bandwidth, and increased capacity," said TeraVicta's President, Robert Miracky. "It was important for us to find a financing partner that shared our vision of wireless solutions and could understand the business needs required to bring next-generation RF solutions to market. So we are especially pleased to work with Silicon Valley Bank."

"Silicon Valley Bank is very pleased to support Teravicta with its financing needs. The company's technical team and its thorough understanding of the wireless industry really impressed us. We believe the company is positioned for rapid growth and we are looking forward to a long-term relationship," said David Clower, Vice President of Silicon Valley Bank's Austin Technology Group.
