United States Coast Guard Purchases 908 Devices' Handheld Mass Spec Devices for Chemical Threat Identification

2025-10-28

BOSTON--(BUSINESS WIRE)-- 908 Devices Inc. (Nasdaq: MASS), a pioneer of purpose-built handheld devices for chemical analysis, announces that the United States Coast Guard purchased 23 of the company's MX908 devices for narcotics interdiction efforts and hazardous threat detection, helping to safeguard ports, waterways and coastal communities. With this purchase, the Coast Guard is now fielding more than 35 MX908 devices across the maritime environment.

Within the Coast Guard highly trained units rapidly deploy to provide frontline protection, including identifying unknown chemical threats, supporting hazardous incident response, and enhancing safety during high-risk operations. Equipped with advanced analytical tools like the MX908, these teams can rapidly and accurately detect chemical threats on scene, whether responding to chemical spills, securing critical infrastructure, or supporting counterterrorism and boarding missions.

The MX908 utilizes high-pressure mass spectrometry (HPMS) for chemical identification at trace levels with exceptional sensitivity and unmatched selectivity, empowering first responders to make swift, informed decisions at the point of need. The MX908 is set apart by its ability to detect trace levels of drugs, explosives and other hazardous materials in all forms—solids, liquids, vapors and aerosols.
